

Individual Reflection — Week 7

Benjamin Sannholm (Team Ginger)

What do I want to learn or understand better?

Currently, I do not feel that these reflections follow the desired structure of A, B and A→B. Although this is almost my last reflection, I would like to be able to write this more according to that structure so it is a more effective tool that I can gain more from. However, the recurring problem I seem to have is that most of what I write here are somewhat artificial/unimportant “problems” or problems that solve themselves which means I am already quite happy with the way I and the team do things or I have no way of evaluating my suggested improvements and methods. I suppose the conclusion is that the team’s work has gone very well and I cannot in reality find any true problems that are difficult enough to not solve themselves or worth solving in the first place.

How can I help someone else, or the entire team, to learn something new?

Beyond working on my own assignments this sprint, I helped five other members with some of each of their questions and problems. With Emanuel, I helped debug why the sharing functions were not acting as expected and a strange issue that caused errors and crashes when the achievement/leveling popup was supposed to be shown. With Sophia, I showed how to use a certain API of the navigation library we use. With Alexander, I explained how React handles state updates and how he would need to utilize this for switching the trash can image on the Home page. With Snjezana, I helped to try and get her development environment to not misbehave so she could work. With Bashar, I helped with git and to make sure the analytics page was fixed after I had accidentally broken it during this sprint.

I do not feel I would like to change anything with regard to this. I try to help when I can as best as I can for the moment.

What is my contribution towards the team’s use of Scrum?

I have performed about the same tasks as previous sprints but since it is our last sprint some topics were not relevant anymore. I have attended stand-up and supervision meetings, I have made sure the Scrum board is complete and kept up-to-date, and reviewed this week’s pull requests together with the team. I believe this, once again, has worked well and the team has produced what was planned.

What is my contribution towards the team’s deliveries?

This week I continued on my two assigned user stories from the last sprint since they were lacking tests. I finished this early in the week and then got assigned to start preparing for the final report, together with Sophia and Bashar. We worked on this on Thursday for a couple of hours. Sophia produced the majority of the preparations and later I made sure to look through it all and added a couple of points.
